

By lowering the current regulations on immoral activities of public sex and nudity, the FCC has made itself an obsolete agency to enforce anything broadcasted by the media.

It is bad enough our nation has lost its decency and morals with the racy stuff out there in magazines and the WWW.

It would be best for the FCC to, at least, keep the regulations on such behavior intact. Otherwise there is no point for the FCC to monitor broadcasts.

Please consider our comments and ask God for guidance in your decision making.

Thanks,

Adam Kuenzig