

I support the elimination of current FCC indecency standards. Indecency is inherently subjective. What one person finds completely indecent others find perfectly decent. The subjective opinions of any person or group of persons should not be able to limit or punish content creators. Indecency standards are used by minority groups in an attempt to force their subjective opinions onto others. If the majority of the population was against indecent programming, then the companies making that content would never make any money. The fact that those companies do make money proves that the majority of the population supports the decrease in or elimination of indecency standards.
