

I am 100% against relaxing the current policy concerning profanity and nudity on television and radio. The problem with relaxing the regulation against "isolated" incidents is that these instances will become more and more frequent, thus becoming commonplace. This will force someone to "define" what is considered an "isolated incident," which many networks, writers, directors, etc. will take full advantage of and push as far as can possibly be pushed. This can already be seen in the current lot on today's airwaves, which is a far cry from what was heard or seen on T.V. and radio even 10 years ago. I, myself, do not want to be exposed to these things; let alone exposing my children to it. Leave this kind of rubbish to the likes of those premium networks. DO NOT LOWER THE CURRENT STANDARDS FOR PROFANITY AND NUDITY ON TELEVISION AND RADIO!!!
