

I support the changes proposed in GN Docket No. 13-86 which would change the current FCC indecency standards. It is not the proper role of government to be enforcing irrational taboos. The first amendment specifically forbids religious motivations for doing so. Our country is faced with an epidemic of poor body image among our youth, which could be countered by showing more nudity of average body types in non-sexual contexts, as is now common in Europe. Our children have the right to know what their species is supposed to look like without clothing. Censorship through bleeps, bars, or pixelation is demeaning to audience members of all ages and should be banned.
