

A main reason for our family sticking with the "farmer five" stations ,and bucking the "norm" of cable/satellite television, is the lack of concern the media has for the impressionable minds of children - including too many immature young adults. Give families a break from having to constantly have our fingers on the "off" button. Many shows on the network stations, including news shows, already challenge our eye/ear/hand reflexes. I am thankful for the recent additions of classic television stations like MeTV and AntennaTV. It's only some of the advertising on these two stations that are somewhat questionable - not to mention repetitive. Don't make us have to give up network television altogether. We will, however - with no hesitation - if nudity and profanity are allowed.
