

How did we evolve from "Frankly Scarlet I don't give a damn !" to the word B? Is it lack of a moral compass? Is it society itself trying to push the envelope to see how far is to far? Or, could it be the down right dumbing down of society and this is the only effective way to communicate entertainment, drama, mysteries, etc.? I hope none of these are the case. I hope that whom ever is at the helm of decision making for the FCC has a moral compas and desires the betterment of all mankind. I am not a total "Polly Anna"--unrealistic in my views. The world can be rough and gritty. However, there are as many positives as there are negatives. Why do we focus so heavily on that wich is dark and degrading --stunting any kind of provacative thought? I hope these questions help you on your journey as you will be infleuencing mine along with the rest of my family, friends, and loved ones.
