

To Whom it May Concern:

I'm exercising my 1st amendment rights to speak against indecent (and unnecessary) content in OTA television during primetime. This is a common time for younger audiences to potentially view these shows. I do agree it's the parent's responsibility to screen content that they feel is harmful to their children, but I cannot understand why the current standards are too strict as there is much on television that passes already. To those who need their pornography fix, they can use a more interactive method such as the Internet. To those who feel vulgarity in language is natural, it's not for those of us who do not live on the coasts or metropolitan areas (of course there are those living in those areas who would agree with me I'm sure.) The first amendment was not intended as an excuse for "smut lords" to line their pockets.

Thank you.
