

Consumer broadband ISP options in Houston are extremely limited. There's Comcast for cable, AT&T for DSL, and Clearwire for wireless broadband. The problem is, I've found the service quality of all 3 of these companies to be unreliable at best, and it's very frustrating when your connection quality is so poor that even simple web pages like the Google search homepage don't finish loading before they time out. I've found Verizon to be reliable, and surely there must be other quality ISPs out there, so I hope something can be done to improve the options in Houston.
