

I think it's great that you're finally dropping your idiotic standards on tv. It is not the responsibility of the cable companies, the media producers, or the government to restrict public content. It is the responsibility of the people to chose not to watch it if they find something offensive, and to monitor their own damned children if they don't want them watching something. If someone's child is messed up, it's because the parents messed up. Not because they picked it up from tv. I hope this is only the stepping stone to truly unrestricted television.
