

I strongly oppose the loosening of current FCC standards in regards to language and nudity on television. My family enjoys watching TV together and already find it difficult to find shows that we all enjoy and don't cross our families line of what is appropriate. Many times our favorite shows push the line as far as possible, which makes family viewing uncomfortable. I can only imagine how far the line would be pushed if the current FCC regulations were not in place. As parents, we are aware of what games our teens play and what movies they watch and by loosing the regulations on standard television, that control would be taken away form us. There would be no reasonable way that we could monitor what is being watched in our own home.
