

I fully support the FCC's decision to relax the censoring restrictions it currently uses on radio and television broadcasts. It should not be the government's role to parent the children of this country; if an individual finds a program offensive or inappropriate for children in the household, it is that individual's responsibility to change the channel or turn the program off. Restricting free speech and the expression of ideas runs contrary to the First Amendment and is a much greater moral violation than the use of language and images which only offend a percentage of this nation's citizens.
