

The focus on sex that is already present in public television, in the provocative and suggestive manner of dress, in the provocative use of language, etc., exploits the human person. It demeans the human person by making of another human person an object of selfish, sexual, gratification. Our society already has enough struggles in this area, ex. the current report of sex abuse in the military, the number of sexual abuse cases in our legal system, the rate of divorce in marriages. People do not know how to love well; this increase of sexual exploitation in our mass media would increase the problems we face.