

It is disturbing that there is already too much sex and violence on regular television. It has become more difficult to sit and watch a program with the family because of the concern about what they will see either in a program or even a commercial. I can't believe that the FCC would even consider allowing for more filth to be shown on television.

It is incredible how far our society has fallen from that which is good and uplifting. And to think that John Conway of Astonish Media Group thinks it is ok because it is shown elsewhere, such as in movies, video games and other media outlets. As a parent, I have much more control over those things. Now, I will have to be even more vigilant about what they watch on TV if the FCC allows this to go through.
