

I have two children with differing developmental disabilities. The challenges are many but trying to filter out crude language should not be one of them. Spectrum children often parrot conversation regardless of meaning or context and adding unnecessary words into the conversation takes us backwards. These children are often better visual and/or auditory learners where TV can play a very important part. If the current trend in TV is to increase nudity and vulgar language, we will opt out of watching anymore mainstream tv.

Thanks for your consideration.
