

I strongly urge the FCC to maintain and vigorously enforce the current fleeting expletives policy and do even more to protect children from even one incident of profanity or nudity on television/radio.

Families are bombarded by inappropriate content on television and on the radio today, even during the hours when children are still awake. Even just a single instance of profanity or nudity (whether blurred or pixilated) is indecent for children to see or hear. The FCC should do all that it can to hold broadcasters to a higher standard of decency, and to help parents protect their families from indecent broadcast material.

Thank you.

Alysse Watson
North Carolina