

I am of a low income position, making less than $25,000. I cannot afford any television services such as Dish, cable, or wireless. I am therefore at the mercy of getting all of the television services from my digital television receiver. I am also a volunteer storm spotter. I carry a portable, 12 volt operated television where I can keep up to date on storm location and the overall situation at hand. In 2014, there is a very good possibility I may not have the stations to view to get any information at all. I will be at the mercy of my phone's browser. But that is a problem. 3G often goes down and wifi is not available on the side of a road. I'm looking ahead to a questionable future in many ways. Its a bad road ahead and quite frankly, I may just move to Europe and take a job there where I know a television station will be there for me when I need it.