

I have recently learned about DA 13-581/ GN Docket No. 1386 - plans to change the indecency policies, which would allow nudity and more explicit language (including the F* bomb) on television and radio. As a mother, preschool teacher and licensed education professional, the last thing I want to see is the US lowering its' standards once again, just to make things easier and clear up your desks. If the rules we had were enforced more aggressively, there wouldn't be so many gluttonous media goons trying to sneak by with breaking the standards we have now. We allow so much violence and sexual situations on TV now that it is all but impossible to regulate what our youth is watching - no parental controls don't work. There are many parents who don't use them and we can't see what our children watch at friend's houses. The fact that I have four-year-old students playing Halo and watching Criminal Minds tells me that parents figure that if it ok with the FCC, it must be ok for their children. Now you want to ease up even more and expose these youngsters to more profanity and nudity. When will it stop? 10 years from now, will we be watching live sex shows, telling our children that is ok, too? Please stop caving to media and marketing that care for money and not sense. Draw the line and keep the standards we have now. Our youth cannot afford to be exposed to more of the corruption of our society. They need to know that there are such things as limits and decency.
