

I am constantly bombarded with telemarketing calls at all times of the day and evening. Many are recorded and most are telling me I'm entitled to "a free medical alert system". I've filled out and submitted multiple complaints on the consumer complaint website.

The live calls always ask to speak to my husband and my biggest concern, besides an invasion of my privacy, is that my husband (who has Alzheimer's Disease) may answer the phone and agree to purchase something that I'll be financially obligated to buy.

What are my options at this point?

Thank you -
Jane X. Cavallini-Daudet

I'm on the do-not-call list for all the good it seems to do. The frequency has increased to the point that I feel as though I'm being harassed.

What are my options at this point?