

I don't believe that dropping the ban on the "f word" would be terrible. Adolescents are exposed to this word and many others of the same caliber throughout the day via music, their peers, and often times their family. I don't think it should be encouraged gratuitously, but in viewing hours after 11pm. As for female frontal nudity, I do not believe that promoting the objectification of the female body is a great idea. It's one thing to be able to show the body in scientific-based programming. But I do not believe that women's nudity should be used as they undoubtedly would be- for lascivious purposes, in graphic sexual scenes, and too boost ratings aimed at specific demographics. Women are already objectified and exploited enough on television without nudity being an option. Why push the envelope any further?
