

Good Evening, This question pertains to ham radio communications. I hear two weekly local nets that is called as an ERC (Emergency Radio Communication) LDS (Latter Day Saints Church) net where members are called by their church "wards" to check in. All radio amateurs are welcomed to check in at the end of the net whether affiliated with their church or not. My question to the FCC is ... Is it ok or "legal" to run a net by promoting a particular church denomination? It just doesn't feel right, as a conflict of church and state, state being the government issued license to operate a Amateur radio. I look forward to your response and thank you for your time in doing so. Eileen Jackson
