

While accessibility is a virtuous goal, the idea that every device should provide it is wrongheaded and counterproductive.

EReader providers should collaborate to offer targeted devices to serve specific communities with features like enhanced (large) print or text reading.