

This is in response to Herald Feld Of Digital Public Advocacy Group .AT&T does not care about the low income customers under Cricket. This is evidenced by the amount of small Cricket Dealers that have been shut down by Cricket within the past few months. This dealers have been serving this communities for over 10years, and some of them have been linked to Government sponsored shelters and churches. The reason behind closure for some high performing dealers of Denver does not make sense. The survivability rate implemented as a way to measure performance is a way of weeding out low income surviving dealers. Before the major Cricket was asking dealers to open up more stores and now they are shutting down leaving dealers with retail store leases & no business. Trying to get a clear picture of what is going on has been nothing but tiring, this is the reason for this post.
