

This is just such a wonderful service and I would like to thank the FCC, our President and anyone else involved in making it happen for us blind.

I never thought I'd see the day when a law would be passed that would make this a thing here in the U.S. Yes, it is difficult for most blind people to access it as the boxes don't talk us through the menus that have to be set to get it, but maybe that will change in time. That's another dream of mine and I hear it is in the works. When it has all been set though it is such a wonderful joy to be able to watch something and not miss anything as it's described to you. I'm very glad of the shows that have it as there are a few I watch, but I wish for so many others. I think all of them are great to have as we all have different interests, but I think the most emphasis as to what will be described should go toward action and drama shows, but it also nice to have some comedies that way too. I would love to see the day when everything is described and I pray that we never lose this wonderful service.

As to online description, I think it's great also, but I would love to be able to pause the shows and at the moment I know of no universal way to do that, which is why I rarely, if ever, watch them online.
