OPPOSITION TO MUST CARRY COMPLAINT

Oceanic Time Warner Cable LLC ("TWC"), by its attorneys, and pursuant to Section 76.7 of the Commission's rules,[1] hereby submits this Opposition to the Must Carry Complaint ("Complaint") filed by Hawaii Catholic TV, Inc., licensee of television broadcast station KUPU-TV ("KUPU"), Waimanalo, HI. The Complaint requests that the Commission find that KUPU is entitled to carriage on all of TWC's five cable systems located in the Honolulu, HI Designated Market Area (the "Honolulu DMA") despite the fact that KUPU cannot deliver a good quality signal to four of those systems. For the following reasons, this Complaint should be denied as to four of the affected systems, and dismissed as moot for the TWC cable system serving the island of Oahu, where KUPU already enjoys carriage.[2]

[1] 47 C.F.R. § 76.7.

[2] Procedural defects provide an independent basis for dismissal of KUPU's Complaint. Commission's rules require that "Petitions and Complaints shall be accompanied by a certificate of service on any cable television system operator, franchising authority, station licensee, permittee, or applicant, or other interested person who is likely to be directly affected if the relief requested is granted." 47 C.F.R. § 76.7(a)(3). Notably, KUPU failed to serve a copy of its Complaint on the other television broadcast stations located in the Honolulu DMA, and especially those on Hawaiian Islands other than Oahu, as expressly required by FCC rules. As explained in detail below, a grant of the primary relief sought in the Complaint, namely the relocation of TWC's principal headend designations to a single location on the island of Oahu, would negatively impact such stations' mandatory carriage rights. Accordingly, they should have been served with a copy of the Complaint and been provided an opportunity to weigh in. Failure to serve the other broadcast stations here warrants dismissing the Complaint as procedurally defective.

BACKGROUND

KUPU is seeking carriage on all five TWC's cable systems located in the Honolulu DMA. The Honolulu DMA covers the entirety of the Hawaiian Islands, spanning hundreds of miles with vast expanses of Pacific Ocean geographically separating the islands and the systems. TWC's five cable systems in the Honolulu DMA include one each serving the islands of Kauai, Maui,[3] and Oahu, and two systems serving the island of Hawaii, one serving the eastern portion and one serving the western portion. Because KUPU is located on and transmits from the island of Oahu, and thus can deliver a good quality signal to the designated TWC principal headend there, KUPU is currently carried only on TWC's Oahu system. In essence, then, KUPU's Complaint seeks carriage on TWC's other four systems serving the islands of Kauai, Maui, and Hawaii. It does so despite the fact that KUPU admittedly cannot, as required by statute in order to qualify for carriage, deliver a good quality signal to any of these other four systems' designated long standing principal headend locations.[4] To overcome its failure to qualify for carriage, KUPU takes the extraordinary position that the Commission should redesignate TWC's Oahu principal headend as the principal headend for all of TWC's Hawaiian cable operations, thereby triggering carriage throughout all five cable systems. As explained below, there is no factual or legal basis for this request, and the Complaint should be dismissed.

I. KUPU IS NOT ELIGIBLE FOR CARRIAGE ON TWC'S FOUR NON-OAHU CABLE SYSTEMS.

Under Section 614(h)(1)(B)(iii) of the Communications Act and Section 76.55(c)(3) of the Commission's rules, the definition of a "local commercial television station" eligible for mandatory carriage specifically excludes any "television broadcast station that does not deliver to the principal headend of a cable system either a signal level of... -61 dBm for digital signals at the input terminals

[3] TWC's Maui system also serves the islands of Lanai and Molokai, which are part of Maui County.

[4] Complaint at 3 and Exhibit 2. Indeed, as indicated by KUPU's own Longley-Rice analysis of its signal, the station's transmissions do not extend beyond the physical boundaries of the island of Oahu. See Exhibit A.

of the signal processing equipment..."[5] As demonstrated by properly conducted signal tests at TWC's four non-Oahu cable system principal headends, tests which KUPU attached in Exhibit 2 to its Complaint, KUPU plainly fails to deliver the requisite "good quality signal" to any of these four principal headends.[6] KUPU does not dispute the results of the tests. The uncontroverted facts thus confirm that the Station is statutorily ineligible for carriage on any of these four systems.

In an unavailing attempt to circumvent its ineligibility for mandatory carriage, KUPU argues that TWC's longstanding principal headend designations associated with the systems are unreasonable, and that the Commission should instead deem TWC's Oahu principal headend as the common principal headend for all of TWC's Hawaiian cable operations. KUPU asserts incorrectly that the Oahu headend location functionally serves as the single, master headend for all the systems, with all signal reception functions for each of the five TWC Hawaii cable systems consolidated at this single location. Based on this erroneous assertion, KUPU argues that all of TWC's Hawaiian cable systems should be treated as a unified cable system with a singular principal headend designation on the island of Oahu.

There is no basis for redesignating any of TWC's principal headends to Oahu or for treating all TWC's Hawaiian operations as one unified cable system. While TWC does indeed maintain some signal processing and control facilities in Oahu for shared use by all its Hawaiian operations, each of the four other systems also retains significant signal reception equipment and control facilities at their respective principal headends. Based on well-established Commission precedent, the existing principal headend designations are entirely reasonable. Indeed, the unprecedented relief sought by KUPU would force TWC to engage in significant and costly technical reconfiguration of its facilities and allow the station to circumvent its statutory obligation to deliver its signal to each headend where it seeks carriage, at no cost to the cable operator. As Commission precedent makes clear, "a cable operator is not responsible for the transportation of a station's signal to its principal headend...."[7]

Since the inception of the must carry regime in 1993, the Commission has recognized that a cable system may have multiple locations that perform various discrete signal reception and processing functions.[8] Indeed, this is especially true with today's regional cable networks operating with advanced fiber-ring technologies, and this is the case in Hawaii. Because of this, the Commission has given cable operators wide discretion, albeit within reason, to designate the principal headend location for any given cable system. As the Commission explained when it adopted the "principal headend" definition in 1993:

> [W]e believe that Congress intended to allow the system to select its own principal headend, provided that its choice is reasonable and is not made in order to circumvent the must-carry obligations imposed by the 1992 Act.[9]

Subsequent case law supports the substantial deference given to cable operators in designating principal headends.[10] As the Bureau explained in 2004: "a cable system has some flexibility in its choice of a principal headend provided its choice is reasonable and not made to circumvent must carry obligations."[11]

Commission case law sets forth various indicia of reasonableness that weigh in favor of a cable operator's headend designation, including an assessment of numerous factors such as the headend's historic location, geographic and demographic proximity of the system and the headend, and the location of the processing and reception equipment. Applying the factors relied on in previous cases, the facts and circumstances here clearly demonstrate the reasonableness of TWC's current principal headend designations and that TWC in fact operates five separate cable systems in Hawaii:

- Each of TWC's five Hawaiian cable systems is geographically distinct, either serving individual islands or discreet portions of islands, geographic areas that are physically separate and remote from one another.
- Each cable system is separately franchised and separately regulated by the State of Hawaii.[12]
- The Commission has recently recognized and confirmed the separate geographic and franchise boundaries of TWC's eastern and western island of Hawaii cable systems in the effective competition/rate regulation context.[13]
- Each cable system has a unique FCC Physical System Identification number,[14] and each files its own separate annual report on FCC Form 325.[15]
- As shown on the FCC Form 325s, each system has its own channel lineup, with a unique mix of local broadcast stations and system specific local programming.[16] For example, KWHM, Wailuku, is carried only on the Maui system. KLEI, Kailua, is carried only on the West Hawaii system, and KALO and KWHE, Honolulu, are carried only on the Oahu system.
- Each of the five separate systems has its own island specific public, educational and government ("PEG") access programming. The State of Hawaii's DCCA, the franchising authority, contracts with four different non-profit organizations to provide PEG services specific to each county (Maui also covers Lanai and Molokai which are part Maui County). For example, on Oahu the PEG provider is Olelo, on Maui it is Akaku, on the Big Island of Hawaii PEG programming is produced by Na Leo and on Kauai the PEG provider is Hoike. Each PEG programmer has at least three full time channels on the respective TWC system.
- Each system files its own bi-annual compulsory copyright filings with the Copyright Office, with each filing showing the separate channel lineups for each system.[17]
- Each system's designated principal headend is in a location that is central to the geography and demography of each franchise area.[18]

TWC's five cable systems have been separately rate regulated by the state, and TWC has always filed separate rate showings with the department.

[16] The channel lineups for each system are attached as Exhibits G-J.

[17] The two Island of Hawaii systems file a consolidated statement of account, albeit with separate lineup/subscriber groups identified for each separate system.

[18] Exhibit K.

- Each system's designated principal headend contains significant signal reception, processing, transmission, and other operations equipment, with specific equipment tailored to the technical needs of that system.[19]
- As required by Commission rules, the location of each of the principal headend is properly listed in each system's public file.[20]
- The location of each system's principal headend has remained in its current location for many years, since well before KUPU was first licensed and began operation in 2003.

The Bureau's 2002 decision in Minority Television Project, Inc. v. AT&T Broadband, LLC is precisely on point here.[21] The case involved multiple AT&T cable systems in the San Francisco DMA spread out over a wide geographic area. As here, each separate cable system had its own, long-standing principal headend designations. As with TWC's Oahu facility, AT&T also operated a facility on Mt. Sutro to process certain television broadcast and other programming signals and distribute them back to each appropriate system using a fiber ring. Because local television broadcaster KMTP was unable to deliver its signal over the air to all the headends, it requested, as KUPU is requesting here, that the Commission redesignate the Mt. Sutro facility as the principal headend for all of AT&T's San Francisco systems, pointing to the centralized signal processing activities at that site. The Bureau refused KMTP's request, explaining:

> We cannot conclude that Mt. Sutro is the principal headend for all of AT&T's cable systems in the San Francisco area. The Commission has stated that a cable system may designate its own principal headend, provided that its choice is reasonable and is not made in order to circumvent must-carry obligations. We have permitted cable operators to designate their principal headends even when there may be another receive site controlled by the operator that is more convenient to the broadcaster. . . We do not agree with MTP's argument that AT&T principal headend designations are unreasonable and established to circumvent the must carry rules. The headends that AT&T identifies as its principal headends are historically associated with multiple cable systems in the San Francisco area. That AT&T constructed facilities at Mt. Suro to receive and then distribute certain broadcast signals does not render its existing principal headends unreasonable or intended to evade its must-carry obligations.[22]

[20] Exhibit M.

[21] 17 FCC Rcd 22810 (MB 2002).

[22] Id. at 22812-13, ¶ 6.

The current situation here is indistinguishable. As with the AT&T systems and the Mt. Sutro facility, TWC's Hawaiian operations also engage in signal processing and distribution activities at multiple locations, including both the historic principal headend locations, but also at the Oahu location. As in AT&T, TWC retains separate principal headend designations, again with their own signal processing equipment and activities, and these longstanding designated headends are associated with discreet cable systems operating in the Honolulu DMA. Furthermore, as with AT&T, TWC has never taken any steps relocate any of the principal headend locations, nor taken any other affirmative steps to use such designations to thwart any broadcaster's carriage rights. Thus, just as in the AT&T case, TWC's principal headend designations are entirely reasonable and there is no reason for the Commission to redesignate Oahu as the principal headend for all of TWC's Hawaiian operations.

It is also significant to note that while business and technical considerations have been found sufficient to support the reasonableness of a cable operator's decision to "collapse" several headends and designate a single principal headend,[23] here TWC is simply maintaining the long-standing five principal headends for its five separate Hawaiian cable systems. Thus, as was the case in the Hampton Roads decision, "[t]his is not a situation in which a cable operator has moved its principal headend, resulting in a station losing carriage; on the contrary, [the station] asks [the cable operator] to change its long-established principal headend so that it may gain carriage."[24] As shown by the Hampton Roads case, the Commission does not require a cable operator to alter its principal headend designations to accommodate a television station's carriage request.

Finally, the Commission should be mindful of the unintended consequences of the relief KUPU is seeking to other Hawaiian DMA stations. There are several non-Oahu based broadcast stations that are entitled to must carry rights on TWC's non-Oahu systems. For example, KWHM, Wailuku, is carried only on the Maui system, while KLEI, Kailua, is carried only on the West Hawaii system. If TWC is forced to redesignate Oahu as its principal headend for all five of its Hawaii cable systems, as KUPU is requesting, those stations would either no longer qualify for mandatory carriage because they would no longer deliver an adequate signal to the newly designated headend, or they would face greatly increased costs stemming from the expenses of delivering a signal to the headend by alternative means.

II. TWC'S HAWAIIAN CABLE SYSTEMS HAVE AND WILL CONTINUE TO COMPLY WITH COMMISSION RULES, INCLUDING THOSE SPECIFICALLY RELATED TO RETRANSMISSION AND SUBSCRIBER RECEPTION OF BROADCAST STATIONS.

In the Complaint, KUPU questions TWC's ongoing compliance with the requirement in the Viewability Order that cable system make available at low cost equipment sufficient to allow analog subscribers to receive retransmitted digital broadcast signals. KUPU's entirely speculative concern is wholly without evidentiary support and must be rejected. TWC's Hawaii cable systems remain in full compliance with all Commission rules and requirements, including those associated with the Viewability Order and the availability of retransmitted broadcast signals to all subscribers, and KUPU makes no specific allegation to the contrary. Attached as Exhibit N is TWC's notice to subscribers informing them of their right to obtain such equipment at a reasonable cost, and each system remains ready to provide the appropriate equipment upon a subscriber's request.

III. GRANT OF KUPU'S COMPLAINT WOULD VIOLATE TWC'S FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS.

The Supreme Court has made clear that "cable operators engage in and transmit speech, and they are entitled to the protection of the speech and press provisions of the First Amendment."[25] This is particularly true when cable operators exercise editorial functions, such as selecting programming to carry. Though the Supreme Court upheld the must-carry regime against a facial challenge, it did so by a razor-thin plurality[26] based upon 20 year-old findings that are no longer relevant in an age of [25] See, e.g., Turner Broadcasting System Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 636 (1994) ["Turner I"] ("[C]able operators engage in and transmit speech, and they are entitled to the protection of the speech and press provisions of the First Amendment.").

Internet video and vibrant competition from DBS and telephone companies.[27] It is doubtful that any such mandatory carriage requirement could pass muster under the First Amendment in light of what the Commission has itself called "dramatic changes in technology and the marketplace."[28]

Even under the lower burden of intermediate scrutiny, mandating carriage of KUPU well beyond its natural market of Oahu violates TWC's First Amendment rights. The government interests that have been put forward to support the First Amendment imposition entailed by the must-carry regime do not apply in this instance. Online video, reduced vertical integration in the cable industry, and competition from DBS and telephone companies mean that the government interest in "promoting the widespread dissemination of information from a multiplicity of sources"[29] by granting carriage to KUPU, in particular, is not sufficient to overcome the Constitutional hurdles presented by intermediate scrutiny. These same developments in the market establish that any of the bottleneck power over programming by the cable industry that concerned Congress in 1992 no longer exists, or is not now such an important concern that TWC's right to exercise editorial control over its programming should be curtailed.[30]

In addition, the purported government interest in ensuring that a "base number of broadcasters survive"[31] is no longer deemed important by Congress, as demonstrated by the adoption of the "Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act of 2012."[32] This significant legislation incentivizes television broadcast licensees to "relinquish voluntarily some or all of [their] licensed

[27] Indeed, the District Court decision upheld in Turner II acknowledged that the record at that time was "conspicuously barren of information about still other market forces that may have vastly more significance in the immediate future, and will bear directly upon such issues as how long must-carry should constitutionally be allowed to last." Turner Broadcasting v. FCC, 910 F. Supp. 734, 754 (D.D.C. 1995) (Jackson, J., concurring).

spectrum usage rights" for other uses.[33] Moreover, with billions of dollars in retransmission consent fees, and additional revenue through multicast streams and online video, the financial health of the television industry, a matter of Congressional concern in 1992, is no longer in question.[34] In any event, any governmental interest in preserving over-the-air broadcasting is not advanced by mandating carriage of a station where it cannot be received over-the-air. In short, KUPU's Complaint does not withstand an as-applied challenge under the First Amendment.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, KUPU's Complaint seeking redesignation of the principal headend serving TWC's Hawaiian cable systems, and immediate carriage of KUPU on all of TWC's Hawaiian cable systems, is without legal foundation and should be denied. The undersigned certify that they have read the submission and to the best of their knowledge, information, and belief formed after reasonable inquiry, it is well grounded in fact and is warranted by existing law; and that it is not interposed for any improper purpose.
