Please do NOT allow inflight passengers seated around me, or me either, to start talking on our cell phones while inflight. This is an awful idea on many levels and you should be able to figure that out. No special ear phones will be able to drown out the loudmouth speaking 8 inches from my head. If you are going to allow airlines to allow this (some will only care about the additional fees they can charge), then please require the separation of cell phone passengers to the very rear of the passenger compartment AND to have some kind of sound-absorbing barrier between them and the other passengers. Another Rule, if you persist in this Madness, is that the cell phone user in the rear compartment must whisper so as not to disturb the conversation of the cell phone user in the adjoining seats. Let them fight among themselves as to who is talking "too loudly". This is just a real bad idea on so many levels.
