

7521066039.txt

As a frequent flier for both business and pleasure I am strongly opposed to any change to the regulations that would allow use of mobile communication devices, including cell phones, while the plane is in flight. For a safety standpoint, allowing use would severely impede the ability of the crew to rapidly communicate with the passengers in the event of an emergency. Further, use would result in confrontations between passengers or passengers and crew, some of which would be violent, over cell phone user's bad behavior. From a personal pleasure standpoint I find flying to be an unpleasant environment but I am usually able to relax, read, sleep or work. Allowing cell phone use would make this already unpleasant environment intolerable. My wife who is also a frequent flier is of the same opinion.

Regards,
Dana