I have read about the recent ruling suggesting the FCC does not have the authority regulate the Internet in a like manner as traditional phone service. I believe there is definitely legislation needed to ensure the FCC does have equal power to regulate Internet service in the same manner as traditional voice services. I believe it is critical that a free and open Internet is maintained at all cost.

In today's environment we are all increasingly dependent on access and use of the Internet to conduct our daily lives. Companies in a cross industry spectrum have driven us as customers to using "electronic, ie Internet" methods of receiving information, accessing the company services, getting support, and on and on. To think that we would hand to the telephone companies, cable companies, Internet service providers and any limited group of wealthy and powerful individuals or companies to tie us up in the kinds of pricing knots that have been consistently practiced by telephone companies and cable companies will be a travesty. We all know the rich want only to get richer. But at some point we have learned over and over again that government must step in to ensure the little guy doesn't get squished in the process. Please fight for individual citizens and the vast number of small businesses, entrepreneurs and independent professionals who will become targets of exploitation if Internet neutrality is not maintained as it has been up to now. Thank you.

I will be sharing my comments with Senator's Graham and Scott as well as Representative Sanford.
