Net neutrality is critical to American innovation and progression. Restriction of information and access by carriers restricts information and access to citizens and cannot occur. This position allows for carriers to throttle and restrict the contact needed to support business, research new ideas and innovations, develop the economy through free access for all, and ultimately place an undue burden on the citizen as carriers continue to increase rates for such access. Net neutrality is important to the citizens of the United States and should be considered the overriding factor to this decision, not the lobbyists and carrier influence into the system. Take a stance and show the citizens that you serve that you have their best interests at heart, not large carriers who are looking to increase profits.
