

Permitting unrestricted calling on airplanes would be inhumane. Passengers are already denied basic comforts on airplanes, and cell calls would make it worse. Limited calling with a minimum price of $5 a minute would be an acceptable compromise, allowing truly important calls but providing a strong incentive to keep them short.