Please do not allow cell phone calls on airplanes. I know that not every phone user is impolite, but impolite users (even a minority) are large enough in numbers and percentage to cause the disadvantages of phone usage on airplanes to far outweigh the advantages. Airline companies may be neutral or even favor usage, as they envision a revenue stream from both users (connect fees) and non-users (quiet zone fees). It is sad when the average, regular passenger seems to be less and less important and valued. On the street and in stores, people who are annoyed by loud cell phone conversations have the ability to walk away, but not on an airplane.
