Approving the use of cell phones for voice communications during flights on commercial aircraft is a very bad idea. I do not want to have to hear other passengers converse while I am trapped in a tube traveling 6 miles above the earth with no way to get away. It's bad enough when I sit next to a chatterbox who thinks I should be most interested in what he/she has to say, let alone having to hear what he/she has to say to someone who is not even on the plane. I cannot believe that the benefit to phone call users will outweigh the sheer annoyance and generation of contention that will occur on board flights. We are bombarded with media, sounds, pollutions, and enough emails, texts, and notifications, enough already. I ask the commission to approve the use of cell phones/mobile devices for digital communications only, and keep the ban of voice use intact.
