I am wholeheartedly opposed to phasing out landline funding. While I support increased funding for Internet services, giving up a landline for telephone calls is not going to be an option for decades. Especially for small and rural libraries that not only may not have access to other means of verbal communication, but for the vast number of older people who do not own nor know how to operate a computer. Not to mention emergencies if I need to call the local police or fire, I do not want to take the time to get on the computer and relay a message. We also use our landline for incoming and outgoing FAX messages for the public.
