Dear FCC personnel,

I am a school superintendent and parent of three school age children in K-12 public schools. Our schools are in a rural area that has limited access to bandwidth. Even with web based solutions such as Citrix, our bandwidth infrastructure that leads to our buildings is inadequate and often times makes us resort to making a phone call.

We rely on voice services heavily for communication. Please consider increasing the size of the fund before making any cuts. A focus on broadband would be catastrophic for rural areas such as ours, as many of us do not even have the ability to focus our services on broadband.

If we had the choice, we would most certainly switch to better technologies. However, our rural location and small, independent telco's ability to provide infrastructure is severely lacking.

Thank you for your consideration to increase voice services before cutting them.

Sincerely,

Chris Kleidosty
