I am writing to register my disagreement with the recent news that you propose to allow internet service providers to allow content providers to pay more for improved bandwidth (<http://www.nytimes.com/2014/04/24/technology/fcc-new-net-neutrality-rules.html?hp>). The internet has flourished under its existing model where all content providers are treated equally and moving away from equal treatment for all content providers will stifle innovation, increase costs to consumers, and reduce competition on the internet. I urge you to reconsider these rules and instead regulate the internet as a common carrier.
