I am shocked and dismayed to hear that the Chairman of the FCC is planning to recommend against Net Neutrality and for carriers being allowed to treat certain traffic preferentially over others. This is an act against the interests of the American people and damages the freedoms on which the Internet has always been and must continue to be based.

Allowing carriers to treat certain traffic preferentially - especially in an environment where carriers are themselves content providers or own content providers as subsidiaries - is both anti-consumer and anti-competitive, and flies in the face of the tenets on which the FCC was founded. Internet carriers MUST be classified as common-carrier utilities and their activities regulated in order to preserve consumer and competitive freedom.
