Im probably wasting my time, but it is worth it in may ways. The internet is a form of speech as it is used to communicate. Allowing broadband providers to regulate and control what forms of "speech" can get first priority by forcing content providers pay more preferential treatment is not net neutrality. Its discrimination which negates neutrality and/or free speech and it is not what the people of the United States want. Free speech is our constitutional right and it should not be controlled by anyone.

The internet should remain free from discrimination and open for all use and communicate.
