I am against any rule that would allow ISPs to charge for "premium" content - like Netflix - and essentially choke smaller websites traffic. This is one more example of the already over-burgeoning oligarchy our nation has become. It will kill small operators and ensure a homogeneous corporate pablum is served to the masses. Do not allow the 1% to grow any further, or the consequences will be uncontrollable. People will rebel in ever more vigorous ways, as the Save the Whales, Environmental, Stop the War, and other historic protests had to go beyond dialogue to make things right. But then, perhaps that's just what we need?

Thank you,
