

7521100698.txt

For the people, by the people. Not for the Corporations at the expense of the people.

I'll be blunt - Tom Wheeler is a cancer on the Internet that has clear big business, big cable interests. This is at the direct expense of consumers, start-ups, or basically anyone who isn't AT&T, Time Warner, or Comcast. Further, his rhetoric on trying to sugar-coat a clearly anti-consumer policy with pro-consumer rhetoric is incredibly insulting.

The Internet needs to be classified as a common carrier as that is what it is. If big cable and telecoms want to also provide content, it should be done with fair and open rules governing it. Internet fast lanes are anti-competitive and will hurt consumers and stifle innovation all while benefiting the large ISP oligopoly that already has too much power and money and has caused the US to lag behind the rest of the world when it comes to Internet speed and quality.

I love Netflix, but ultimately what services consumers pick should be up to consumers. Tom Wheeler wants to take away consumer choice, give it back to big cable and, as a consequence, also the companies that produce the content. This would all but nuke any real competition, allowing those same companies to raise prices and provide worse service to consumers.

I am frankly outraged that the FCC is even considering this. It is going to negatively impact everyone, including Big Cable eventually - just wait. It could even impact the United States' place as a world leader. If I could possibly have my way, I would have Wheeler, and any anti-consumer pro-cable advocate kicked out the door immediately. It should be a crime to be steered so clearly by big corporate interests. It is robbery! Just of a different kind.

Shame on you Tom Wheeler. Shame. On. You.