Reports that the FCC may gut net neutrality are disturbing, and would be just one more way for the playing field to be tilted for the rich and powerful who have already made it. Our regulators already have all the tools they need to protect a free and open Internet - where a handful of companies cannot block or filter or charge access fees for what we do online. They should stand up and use them and not give free money to companies who already have excessive profits. The average American doesn't have that kind of budget luxury and we deserve access to all information available to us for education, monitoring our government, making our voices heard and even for own entertainment and enjoyment. Keep the internet free and open!
