

In re: Net neutrality

If the Internet -a utility created with the tax dollars of American citizens for the benefit of military communications in times of crisis among other things- becomes merely an asset of corporate interests for private profit, I will refuse to partake of the system, and will not pay for any "privilege" to be the passive consumer of corporate communication. I left television behind when FCC regulation changes allowed this to happen to that industry. I will not be deterred from taking similar action should the Internet that I helped pay for be given away to private entities for the abuse of my rights to communicate.
