As others rightly note, this proposal would work only under ONE condition: if businesses like "cable companies" cared more about customers than profits. As we all know, that is not a realistic condition to meet. So your proposal is NONSENSE. Some of us are old enough to remember Ma Bell, and don't you ever forget it. It is time to classify this stuff under Title II--ISPs are COMMON CARRIERS. I use them to talk on my land line. I use them to Skype. I have already paid for the access and pay for the infrastructure and time every single month. It is LONG past time for these cable giants to start worrying about something besides their almighty damn profits and it is time for our "keepers of the public trust" to start actually giving a damn about the public. In many places, ISPs are a MONOPOLY or at best a DUOPOLY. This has to stop. Make these "common carriers" and keep them that way. It's the only way information will freely flow.
