

7521101052.txt

The success of business on the internet to date has been based on the tenets of fair and equal access to subscribers, and information. If fair and equal access to information and services is hampered by a corporation's interests, the internet will fall victim to the same noncompetitive practices that exist in so many other industries today.

I, and many others, implore you to consider this when making any decisions about a free and open internet.