The internet should be an open source of information for all, free from restraint and censorship. The internet so far has been a way for any and everyone to openly share information, communicate worldwide, share opinions, and be free from judgement from the safety of their own homes. To monitor, censor, restrict, or in any way control what citizens can and cannot do on the internet would deal a great blow to the freedom we have. It would take away the feeling of security and severely hurt the transfer of information, communication, and sharing of opinions due to the fear of being watched or wondering if for some reason what they say may be restricted or gain them unwanted attention. Keep the internet open and free. We all deserve, and some even need it this way.
