I am a successful Silicon Valley entrepreneur, awarded by the White House / US Chamber of Commerce for the good I've built on the internet.

You *must* enforce net neutrality, as defined by the people building and innovating the internet, which has been a huge driver of growth and competitive advantage for the US.

Do not accept "net neutrality" as defined by the former ISP lobbyists running the FCC. They aren't nearly as qualified to decide as Silicon Valley is - let alone the should-be-criminal conflict of interest.

I want ISPs reclassified and regulated like a utility. Specifically, the only acceptable solution is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers under Title II of the Telecommunications Act. Information is a public good. The free and open transmission of information promotes the general welfare of our nation. Information should not be segregated between those that can afford the tolls and those that cannot. It is to the detriment of our nation to make corporate entities the de facto regulators of what information is more important than other information. That is not in the interests of the public good. The public infrastructure for innovation should not be for sale to the highest bidder. These resources belong to we the people, not the other way around.
