

7521101642.txt

As a resident of rural New Mexico, I can vouch for the fact that Comcast, which has a virtual monopoly on high speed internet in our rural areas, has not been especially proactive in expanding its services in Tesuque (a suburb of Santa Fe). I am concerned that the current proposal, that is less than open, will further chill incentives to expand high speed internet. I support an open internet system rather than one that will allow large providers like Comcast to buy into high speed rights.