

FCC,

On the matter of Net Neutrality, it is paramount that the internet be classified as a “common carrier service” to ensure a level playing field for both the giants like Amazon.com and upstarts like sketch.io

My greatest concern is that if the internet providers charge the consumer and the provider (see Comcast V Netflix) that a) existing content providers will be disinclined to compete in the United States, thus removing them from the market, and b) if internet providers can charge small businesses, then there may not be new competitors to existing near monopolies that already exist on the internet.

The end result no net neutrality is monopolies on the internet, which reduces the good to each citizen.

Thank you,
Joseph
