The Internet is a wonderful creation of human ingenuity, one that brings people together, one that lies collaboration and cocreation. The openness the Internet has had over the last 2 decades has played a huge part in that. But today, that openness is threatened. The Internet is threatened to now be curated and discriminated against by ISP's and other major providers whose goal is more profit, not a better Internet. If the FCC allows these practices to continue, we will lose the essence of this marvelous medium for communication, creation, and cohabitation. Please do what is right for an open Internet, and don't let the consumers be at the profitous whims of the large ISP's.
