i was hoping someone could clarify why the US government is deliberately sanctioning a protection racket on a service that is considered by the United Nations as a fundamental human right by enormous, historically abusive corporations.

the potential for abuse is unprecedented, the regulation is non-existent, and the only people who benefit sit atop an anti-citizen pyramid with no stable employees and zero overhead.

if the objective is to allow corporations to build infrastructure with the enormous profit they gain it is flawed and in direct contradiction with the constant sandbagging of google fiber by interest-owned politics.

thank you,

p.s. really wish this field allowed for line breaks. your web applet's back function erases my entire post. the FCC clearly does not have any idea how to use the internet, much less police it.
