

7521103917.txt

The internet is one of the major fostering grounds of free speech. The involvement of middlemen such as comcast to discriminate on service type interferes with this free speech. The providing of servers for networks is a carrier service, not a form of service that can be manipulated to "moderate" the expression and consumption of the american public. Any form of carrier discrimination based on content is not only unconstitutional, but bad for business, attacking the very roots of capitalism: freedom to choose services free of corporate influence.