All Internet traffic should be treated equally. Proposed changes damage this ideal fundamentally and will do nothing but harm the internet as we have come to know it. It will negatively influence innovation, the very innovation that has served as the lifeblood of the Internet, and the very force that has allowed it to become such a useful and prevalent force in American daily life. Such changes as the proposed will also limit the abilities of free speech through use of the Internet, through the use of paid prioritization. The Internet should be regulated as a public commodity with the ideals of all traffic being treated equally being forever established and locked in place.
